Hair style big part of wedding image

Every bride wants her hair to look its prettiest on her wedding day. Professional hair care helps.

"Before deciding on a hair style, be sure your hair is in top condition," sayd Hugh Harrison, one of the country's top hair stylists.

A bride's hair should be soft, shiny, and touchable. Weeks before the wedding, become more selective about hair care products. Try shampoos that are matched to normal, oily, or dry hair types.

If your hair lacks body to the point it will not hold styling, consider a body wave or permanent. This should be done at least four weeks before the big day, so the hair will have time to relax.

"Two weeks before the wedding," advises Harrison, "I advise the bride to have a 'health trim'. This is the time to have ends snipped off and it is a time for reshaping and restyling."

Do you color your hair? If so, one week before the wedding check on your hair color, advises Harrison. Is is up to date? No roots showing? Do you want to add highlights?

"Although I avoid drastic color changes for brides, I do think addings soft highlights or special effects can turn a dull looking head of hair into a crown of glory," commented Harrison.

Try to determine which hairstyle is best for the gown and veil you have chosen.

Several weeks before the wedding, stage a 'hair rehearsal'. Put on makeup, work with veil and headpiece.

Most important, be sure your hairstyle completes the idea of your total look.

Choice of engagement ring is important ritual

Choosing an engagement ring and wedding ring is an important part of the courtship ritual and calls for tact on the part of the bride-groom-to-be.

Some girls like to be surprised with an engagement ring....others may prefer to choose the ring themselves or may forego an engagement ring in favor of a wedding band alone. Don't hesitate to ask, if you're in doubt!

If you decide to select the engagement ring together, advise your jeweler as to the amount of money you can afford; he or she will show your fiancee rings that are

It's important to be budget-minded

Newly married? Every young couple ought to think about finances. While there is no easy solution to the problem of inflation, with a little thought and perserverance, you should be able to keep a healthy budget in check.

It is important to plan and execute a financial record-keeping system that makes sense to the both of you. Begin by choosing a convenient place in your home or apartment in which to store important financial and budget-related documents. Soon, you will find that accurate record-keeping is a must for daily transactions and yearly tax reports. You are now ready for the next step!

No matter what your income bracket, it is essential to establish a money plan. First, list your operating expenses, including all sources of income and anticipated bills. Then, make a list of assets and liabilities. Most couples are relieved to learn that planning and keeping a ledger makes finances easier to discuss and spending more realistic. An on-paper accounting is often the beginning of important joint financial decisions.

Both long and short-range goals should be considered in terms of respective careers, education, living quarters, and personal needs. Once you have identified what is important to each or both of you, you are ready to convert your plans into dollar figures and establish a spending program.

Many couples open a savings account with proceeds from wedding gifts. Two-income families often plan living expenses on one paycheck and save the additional salary for vacations and major purchases.

well within your budget category.

Planning a double-ring ceremony? Before the ceremony, your wedding ring should be entrusted to the maid of honor and the bride's ring should be given to the best man for safekeeping. During the ceremony, the rings should be placed on the third fingers of the left hands.
